“Media” at the University Discusses Radio and Television Graduation Projects – Egypt

The Faculty of Media at the university discussed the graduation projects of the Department of Radio and Television under the patronage of Prof. Mahmoud Abu El-Nasr, the university president in Egypt. In his speech on this occasion, he praised the outstanding level presented by the students through their graduation projects, reflecting their awareness of community issues. He commended the notable development witnessed by the Faculty of Media under the deanship of Prof. Nermin Khidr, who managed to elevate these projects to a professional level, making them the first building block for students in their career paths. Prof. Nermin Khidr, the dean of the faculty, emphasized that the projects presented by the students of the Department of Radio and Television were characterized by diversity, depth in addressing issues, and creativity in presentation. The projects included ten works, ranging from short feature films, documentary dramas, and documentary programs to music videos. She highlighted a short feature film titled "Music Box," which deals with the child within every person and their struggle due to mistakes or unintended habits in upbringing, whether from parents or school, and "Round Trip," a short feature film symbolically presented by the students, relying on several metaphors related to the harsh treatment by parents towards their children.
